On view at Hauser & Wirth through January 5, “Charles Gaines, Palm Trees and Other Works,” is the first exhibition at the gallery for the noted LA artist, educator and recipient of the 2019 Edward MacDowell Medal. Featuring new work from his signature Gridwork series, as well as watercolors based on varied trees, this presentation is an exceptional example of Gaines’s rigorous application of his numbered systems, a process central to his decades-long conceptual practice. Designed by renowned architect Johnston Marklee and landscape architect Pamela Burton, the new Margo Leavin Graduate Art Studios—the result of the largest single donation in UC history—opens its doors this fall. The 48,000-square-foot campus restores and expands the UCLA Arts Culver City campus in the industrial Hayden Tract. It includes the adaptive reuse of a historic wallpaper factory and an expansion of studios, laboratories, galleries and an artist-in-residence loft. ART.UCLA.EDU

The Brazilian artist Ernesto Neto’s first exhibition in Los Angeles since 2003, when he installed a one-person presentation at MOCA Pacific Design Center, is on view at Tanya Bonakdar Gallery through November 2. “Ernesto Neto: Children of the Earth” probes the construction of social spaces and the natural world through materials such as hand-dyed fabric, spices and shells. Viewers can step inside immersive installations for encounters with spirituality, energy, balance and space. TANYABONAKDARGALLERY.COM

This functional art (a.k.a. arty furniture) exhibition at UTA Artist Space, in collaboration with Carpenters Workshop Gallery, showcases over 50 pieces from 24 artists ranging from Virgil Abloh chairs to Nacho Carbonell seating and lamps to Maarten Baas clocks. Following a similar, highly engaging presentation at this year’s Venice Biennale, “Dark Fantasy” is based on the concept of Archiefuturism—excavating forms from the past to shape future design—and takes viewers on an adventure, questioning the constraints of reality with both eccentric and organic forms throughout multiple galleries. Fashion Trust founder Tania Fares and former Vanity Fair Executive West Coast Editor Krista Smith go inside the studios of over 40 leading LA fashion designers, including Jeremy Scott, Sophie Buhai, Raquel Allegra and The Elder Statesman, with their new tome, Fashion In LA, launching this fall. Taking cues from the city’s deep history with graphic design, the actual book’s design is wildly colorful and the pages within reveal interviews alongside images of the designers, their personal ephemera and looks from their archives. LA fashion designer Johnson Hartig of local cult favorite line Libertine has teamed up with venerable textile house Schumacher on a playfully edgy home collection. Hartig’s singular, zippy motifs such as Modern Toile and Bodhi Tree are incorporated into fabric, wall coverings and trims. This perfect partnership between two entities known for unfettered whimsy with a nod to classicism offers fresh accents for chic domiciles. FSCHUMACHER.COM

Author Angella Nazarian follows her bestselling title, Visionary Women, with a fall release spotlighting 15 couples who inspire each other and have changed the course of history as a team, including Jane Birkin and Serge Gainsbourg. Creative Couples journeys the globe into the intimate moments and relationships of legendary painters, philosophers, filmmakers and even royalty, examining each duo as individual halves and how they came together to be a stronger whole. A billboard above Lowell Cafe announces the end of cannabis prohibition

America’s first cannabis cafe is now serving organic farm fresh food, coffee, juice and weed daily on La Brea Avenue. In 1909, William “Bull” Lowell began growing Indian hemp on his Central Coast farm, but it was outlawed for many years. Today, anyone can sit on the Lowell Cafe patio, order a meal and openly partake in the restaurant’s herb-infused offerings. Lowell even has a private event deck and a delivery service for those who prefer their cannabis on the go. LOWELLFARMS.COM
